B12 Success with Alzheimer's

Dear Duncan: First of all, I've been buying your magazine for ages and it's the most informative magazine I've ever read. Long may it continue.

I live in Maleny (southeast Queensland) and have been a carer for my mother, who has Alzheimer's disease, for 10 years. It has been a hugely stressful situation for both of us, and it has been heartbreaking to watch her deterioration. After I read your article by Joseph Hattersley (vol. 14, no. 6) about B12 deficiency, I immediately put my mother on 3,000 mcg of vitamin B12 per day.

After four days, the change in her was amazing. The wide-eyed, crazed look disappeared from her eyes, her agitation and fearfulness disappeared, too, as did the constant pacing around and repetitive behaviour. She "grew" inches in height. She had been shuffling around, bent over at a 90-degree angle, but began to straighten again.

I have been getting some sense out of her conversations again, when before she was talking utter nonsense. She was able to tell me that she had been "feeling very ill for a long time", but now felt "much better". She also told me that she had felt very "agitated and frightened from people" but now felt "normal" and "calm" again. She is not 100 per cent and still suffers confusion, particularly as the day goes on, but still I am astonished at the improvement.

I have also been in contact with Alfons Ven, who has very kindly sent her some of his tablets for Alzheimer's [see part one in vol. 14, no. 6 and part two in this edition; Ed.]. She took the first one today, and so I am also waiting excitedly to see the results of his cure for Alzheimer's disease.

In addition, I have been weaning my mother off Risperdal, which she had been given for Alzheimer's and which I have since discovered should never be given to the elderly as it causes awful side effects including stroke.

Thank you so much for those articles. The amount of stress that has been removed from my life and my mother's can't be counted, and to look at my mother now and see how much she has improved is just mind-boggling...

Best wishes,
Faye Y., Queensland, Australia

The Harm in Big Pharma

Dear Duncan: Thank you for running the important article on Wikipedia bias (vol. 14, no. 6). We in the alternative healthcare community have noted that this bias is especially severe with regard to advanced healthcare therapies that are not part of the Big Pharma agenda.

The author is correct that there is a "sceptic" (and "quackwatch") posse that uses Wikipedia to denigrate advanced therapies. We see the same gang using sophisticated interweavings of Wiki articles, web rings and other online techniques to "control" information about complementary and alternative modalities (CAM) in ways that harm the public but help Big Pharma. There is some evidence that PR firms with close corporate connections are behind this abuse of the Internet, as WikiScanner shows.

This attack coordinates with the efforts of Big Pharma through Codex Alimentarius and the North American Union (similar to attacks in the European Union, Australia and New Zealand) to prevent the public from receiving truthful and not misleading information about nutrients and their value in preventing the many diseases of undernutrition and malnutrition: diabetes, cancer, heart disease, etc.

A number of people in the advanced healthcare community in the US are seeking to establish alternatives to these tainted media, and good alternative information can be found on websites such as the Institute for Health Research (<http://www.inhere.org>) and the Natural Solutions Foundation (www.globalhealthfreedom.org), so we urge NEXUS New Times readers to look out for important initiatives in this area in 2008, especially with Dr Ron Paul's strong support for healthcare freedom of choice, the Global Health Freedom site being especially important in this regard.

Hitler's Flight to Freedom?

Hello, Duncan: Your article "Fabricating the Death of Adolf Hitler" [part one, 14/06] vividly projected me into the time frame of your subject.

To comment on your article, I feel obliged to introduce myself. My name is Dieter H. B. Protsch, born on 29 April 1932 in Berlin, Germany, as the eldest child to two loving parents who were members of the NSDAP (Nazi Party) and were close friends of Prince "Auwi" (August Wilhelm), the Kaiser's son, and Dr Joseph Goebbels (who became my godfather). When my parents left the party in 1939, only Auwi maintained contact. My father joined the German Air Force and later served in various campaigns that included service under Field Marshal Erwin Rommel in Africa.

As the eldest in the family, I took it upon myself to assume unusually responsible tasks. Bombed out during the Allied air raids, the family was evacuated to the Polish border area from which we later had to flee from the advancing Soviet Army.

As a member of the Hitler Youth's Jungvolk, I finally ended up in the Volkssturm during the last combat phases in Berlin. Being without a permanent home, my family ended up living mostly in basements or with some distant relatives.

Coming back to your article, I must relate an unusual experience during the last phases of the Berlin defence. Searching for food for the family one night, I stumbled upon a basement occupied by several Waffen-SS men operating radio equipment. Spotted, I was briefly detained. Given some food, chocolate and rest, I then witnessed an unusual outburst by the head communicator who jubilantly shouted that the Führer had got his late birthday present and made it out, thanks to Hanna Reitsch. After that, they mentioned the fact that she had been in the Führerbunker for several days, apparently for that purpose.

After they gave me some more bread, they sent me on my way, wishing me good luck and handing me the only and latest issue of the abbreviated newsletter for the defenders of Berlin: the so-called Panzerbär, dated 29 April 1945. I suddenly realised that it was my birthday, not even knowing what day it was. After a night's rest, still thinking about what I had witnessed, I rejoined my group of somewhat disorganised "fighters", only to be captured by a group of seemingly drunk Soviet soldiers. My POW status only lasted three days, but it took several weeks to rejoin my family.

Did Hitler really make it out of Berlin, using the Unter den Linden Allee and a Fieseler Storch flown by Hanna Reitsch? Did Eva Hitler also leave?

Subsequent readings such as The Fall of Berlin 1945 by Antony Beevor, using actual Soviet material and records, seem to confirm that none of the bodies found in the bunker was truly identified as that of Hitler or Eva. The Soviets made sure that no traces were left to identify the bodies through DNA testing.

After my emigration to the United States, where I served for 20 years as a Special Forces officer, I returned to Germany on three tours—one of which included Berlin as well as Korea and Vietnam.

Some of my sources also believed that Hitler left Germany for South America, turning command over to Admiral Dönitz.

I must admit I had an unusual career, which prompted me to write my memoir, Be All You Can Be: From a Hitler Youth in WWII to a US Army Green Beret.

NB: Please keep letters to approx. 150 to 250 words in length. Ed.

Should you be able to access the book, published by Trafford Publishing (Canada), I go into more detail on page 31 regarding the SS communicators.

After many years of reading NEXUS, my wife and I are constantly looking forward to the next issues.

Sincerely,
Dieter H. B. Protsch, Major (Ret.), US Army

Hunting Hitler's "Black Boats"

A friend forwarded a copy of the magazine with the article by Giordan Smith, in which he details that Adolf Hitler did not die in the bunker in Berlin [part one, 14/06]. He is absolutely correct, and anyone who believes the old manufactured propaganda story about the suicide of Adolf Hitler and Eva Braun (Hitler) is probably still waiting for the arrival of the Easter bunny! They did indeed get out of Europe—and the major world leaders at the time knew it.

We at Sharkhunters are the world's experts on U-boat activities during the war and after the war—yes, after the war when the "black boats" made the run from Spain to Argentina. Sharkhunters is not a small operation or a hobby; we have more than 7,300 members in 75 countries and our HQ is in Florida, USA.

One of our members was a petty officer on one of the "black boats" that operated until 1947 and his boat made three trips to South America after the war. The mountain of evidence is overwhelming.

I am personally going to South America in a few months' time to talk with a good friend, now 95 years old, who is the only German agent still living who was placed on the shores of the USA by U-boat. I am also going to a little island in the middle of the Atlantic where "black boats" and other smuggling ships picked up food and fresh water on the way to Argentina through mid-1947—two years after the German surrender. Last, we are investigating the apparent hulks of not one but two scuttled U-boats in a very remote bay far, far away from...anything.

For more information on Hitler's escape, see <http://www.sharkhunters.com/working.htm>. Hitler lived until the middle 1950s, and that is known to the major intelligence groups.

Metaphorical Gospels

Dear Duncan: The reaction to my article "The Forged Origins of Christianity" (NEXUS, June–July 2007, vol. 14, no. 5) was stunning, with people corresponding from such faraway places as Chile, the Chatham Islands and the Orkneys. Congratulations, Duncan; NEXUS Magazine is truly a global force.

Those who opposed my findings should reserve judgement until they absorb new information revealed in an upcoming book that publishes charred codices from the first Christian council at Nicaea in 325 CE. These records were found in 1890 in a genizah in the Seraglio Library in Constantinople (Istanbul today), and their existence provides incontrovertible evidence that the Gospels are not products of historical thinking but consequences of a manuscript tradition that merged ancient philosophical metaphors and ideological fables into allegory.

Thus, the stories of Jesus, Mary and Peter are not about history, but are literary discourses in which abstract ideas are personified—a common trait in all biblical traditions.

That is why there are no historical records of Jesus Christ, Moses, Solomon or David, for they are mythical figures in a literary fictional world of ancient theological prose. Like the Dead Sea Scrolls, the Gospels are metaphorical dissertations, not records of past events, and to treat them as if they are history is to misunderstand the customs of the times in which they were written.

Kind regards,
Tony Bushby

Healthy Diet for Healthy Pets

Dear Duncan: We would like to congratulate veterinarian Dr Tom Lonsdale for actually admitting the errors of his ways and condemning conventional veterinary wisdom [see 14/06].

We found his well-overdue article really hit the nail on the head for us seasoned Natural Rearers.

We have tried and tested, under our own steam, the Natural Rearing wisdom shared with us through The Complete Herbal Handbook for Farm and Stable by Juliette de Bairacli Levy and found her documentary (aired on TV once at the ridiculous time of 11.30 pm) to be inspirational in the rearing of our three Dobermans, one of which is still living at 12.5 years.

We found our way after the tragic life we put our first dog through—with constant feeding of pills and injections throughout his life, the poor diet we had him on, the heart attacks he endured, and then for him to be kept alive with more pills shoved down his throat, only to have him die in my arms at nine years.

Friends would comment on his fetid breath and foul rear-end odours, and his ablutions were worse than a cow pat. We all put it down to "He's a dog; they all smell like that", but in truth we were killing our dog from the inside with unnatural rearing practices, i.e., feeding processed dog food and very little else.

With our newfound knowledge, we went about to breed our first litter of Naturally Reared puppies. Our bitch gave birth to 11 perfect puppies on her own and reared them all herself; we only took good care of her and she did the rest. When we sold the pups, we gave their new carers a simple guide for caring for them; snippets from that guide are as follows:

If you rear a puppy according to the laws of nature, i.e., with a natural diet of raw foods, abundant sunlight, fresh air and exercise, hygienic kennelling, lots of green grass, no chemicals or injections of any sort, you will have a strong and healthy dog for many years to come.

The Natural Rearing Diet (NRD) recommends that there be one meatless day per week, substituting with whole milk, eggs, white cheeses, wholegrain cereals, rice, beans, lentils, etc., followed by a one-day fast, giving fluids only and a laxative the same night (cod liver oil), plus fresh herbs the next morning in their wholegrain cereal.

This simple method rests the kidneys, wards off toxins and worms and rejuvenates the animal. Hungry animals can be given a little honey in their water during fasts.

So the NRD looks like this: four days of meat, one meatless day, one fasting day (two if the pet is not well), and a half-day on herbs and bran in the morning and good fresh meat and garlic at night.

Variations for dinner meat meals may include grated carrot, fresh herbs (parsley, dandelion, clovers, lettuce, all finely chopped). Add cod liver oil in winter and olive oil or grapeseed oil in summer. Give large, uncooked, split bones after midday to gnaw. (Raw chicken legs and wings are full of calcium.)

We sincerely hope all your readers take on board the seriousness of what Dr Lonsdale is conveying.

We certainly still use our vet for anything that arises that is out of our control, but we leave his trained and expert skills for animals that are in much need of more serious doctoring. Our dreams lie with the combination of both these practices going hand in hand to have healthier animals and happier pet owners.

Please buy Juliette's book that Dr Lonsdale recommends—The Complete Herbal Handbook for the Dog and Cat—if you only have dogs or cats, because she will give you the confidence and reassurance to do the NRD. May Juliette rest in peace, knowing that she has made a difference.

Happy caring for your loved ones.
